

The Kitty Knight

The Kitty Knight House, built in 1755, is named after an early American heroine, Catherine “Kitty” Knight. Miss Knight was credited with saving part of Georgetown during the War of 1812. She was the daughter of John and Catherine Knight, both prominent and active citizens of the area. The British invaded the Eastern Shore during the War of 1812. Their goal was to burn down shore communities to protect their soldiers as they moved about the Chesapeake. Miss Kitty stood her ground and pleaded with Admiral Cockburn not to burn down the houses, one of which she lived. She was doing her duty to protect the community. The commodore was so moved by her heroism that he ordered the troops to their barges & left the houses and others in the community unburned.
